2	Introduction From the mid 1850s till the late 1920s, an estimated 100,00 homeless children were sent by train from New York City to small towns and farms in the Midwest. Charles Loring Brace of the Children Aid Society hoped to place them with caring families. Some of the children did well. Some did not. Some exchanged one kind of misery for another. Some found security and even love. This is the story of fourteen orphan children, going West, dreaming of a better life. The Orphan Train itself is real; the route it take and the place names are fictional. The *...
