

Make Predictions

Write about what might happen if you brought the main character of your book home for a day.

Make Predictions

Think about what you've read so far. Make a prediction about what will happen next. Explain why your prediction makes sense.

Make Predictions

What clues did the author give you to help you predict what was going to happen in the book?

Make Predictions

How do you think the main character in your book would behave if he or she was bullied at school? Why do you think so?

Make Predictions

Describe the main setting of your book. What are some events that might happen there?

Make Predictions

How does making predictions help you as a reader?

Make Predictions

Think about the genre you are reading. Use what you know about the genre to predict what might happen next.

Make Predictions

How can you use the inferences you've made about the main character to predict how they will solve their problem? Explain your thinking.

Make Predictions

Did the book end the way you expected? What specific clues did the author give you to help you predict the ending?

Make Predictions

What connections can you make to predict what the main character will do next? Use details from the text to support your prediction.

Make Predictions

Pretend the author of your book wrote a sequel. What do you predict the sequel might be about? Why do you think so?

Make Predictions

What type of predictions did you make most today? Did you predict events, character behavior, or something else?

Make Predictions

What is your job as a reader when you make predictions?

Make Predictions

Use 10 words or less to tell why making predictions is a smart strategy to use while reading.

Make Predictions

Name 3 things you can make predictions about as a reader.

Make Predictions

Did you predict the meaning of any words in your reading? What was the word? What was your prediction?

Make Predictions

What can you use in order to make predictions about a book before you begin reading?

Make Predictions

Think about the writing you've done. How do you help your readers make predictions?

